“Resisting burnout with justice-doing reflects an activist position for staying alive in our work. Vicarious trauma can focus on ways our clients’ pain infects us with hopelessness, yet often our clients inform, transform, educate, provoke, and educate us. The harms in our work most often stem from structures that are oppressive and don’t allow for the resources needed to respond to human suffering. When we are able to enact our ethics, even when it is heartbreaking, sustainability becomes possible. ... If we can enact collective care, as opposed to only self-care, sustainability becomes possible, and we can act in solidarity to shoulder each other up as workers in the dark spaces of our work.” – Vikki Reynolds

SPOKEN WORD PERFORMERS

David Delisca

David is a Haitian-born writer-performer and arts educator based in Toronto. As a storyteller, he expresses his creativity through poetry (spoken word and page), music, acting, and comedy. He uses stories primarily themed in immigrant and diasporic experiences, family dynamics, community, incarceration, self-growth as bridges to various realms of human realities, and communications. As a spoken artist, poet, and author, he is a four-time member of the Toronto Poetry Slam Team in national competitions, winners of the 2013 Canadian Festival of Spoken Word national title in Montreal; has performed at Nuit Blanche with a one-hour poetry filibuster; has taken stage as part of When Brothers Speak; is a member of social justice group “Five Fingers, One Fist” backed by John Carlos; has been published in The Great Black North and Basodee; and has published a poetry collection called I Grew Up Right Beside You. He is also a founder and creator of art-based social engagement projects, Right Beside You, and a collective member of the Spoke N’ Heard.

Shahaddah Jack

Born and raised in Tkaronto with a diverse cultural background that grounds her in her poetry and life is Shahaddah Jack, the 19-year-old bilingual spoken word poet, performer, emcee, human rights activist, arts facilitator, and student of life. She uses the realities of her identity to create stories of art that connect with others and are used to teach one of her greatest beliefs in life, that your pain is your strength. Not only does she do this with her poetry, but conjointly with her activism and arts facilitation as well. For her efforts, Shahaddah has recently been announced as BGC Canada’s 2022 National Youth of the Year. In her writing, Shahaddah takes a poetic stance on human rights and social justice. Her poetry speaks to the lived Black experience, the intersectionality of womanhood, and the adversity of adolescence. As an Artist Mentor, Shahaddah has facilitated poetry, human rights, and artist mentoring workshops in collaboration with organizations like BGC, Scadding Court, Guelph University, JAYU, and many others.
